

How to create a revision timetable

1. Mark out three or four revision slots on a school night and six to eight on a weekend or holiday. Each slot represents 30 minutes of revision.
2. Rule out your regular commitments and other one-off events. For example, football training might take up three slots on a Thursday night, and a family birthday might rule out half of Saturday.
3. List all the subjects you study. Include English language and English literature; two slots for maths; biology, chemistry and physics; and your option subjects. Mix them up so each subject is spaced out as best you can.

4. Fill all the available slots in turn. Repeat until the timetable is full.
5. Get revising. Adhere to the Pomodoro Technique by taking 5-10-minute breaks between each 30-minute slot, and a longer break after three or four slots.
6. Tick off when you successfully complete a revision slot to keep yourself accountable. Reward yourself after 10 successful slots.
7. Plan your next month of revision, adapting your timetable to suit your preferences. The more you revise, the more you'll find what works for you.
